TOO MUCH COMPETITION.
"Too much of a good thing is no good," so it is said. Competition in almost every trade, business, profession, or enterprise, is good; but too much competition is no good. Monopoly, as a rule, is bad, and generally to be deprecated. In some exceptional cases, monopoly is good, as in instances where monopoly might provide a public benefit that competition would kill. Up to a certain point, competition is helpful to enterprise, but beyond that hurtful. In almost every trade, business, and enterprise in Honolulu, competition has exceeded that point. Almost everything is overdone. There are too many stores, too many shops, too many builders, too many printing offices, too many newspapers, too many trades people entirely for the amount of population and requirements of the place. The natural consequences are, the reducing of prices to an unprofitable if not ruinous figure, inferior quality of article, and a danger of terminating a brief career in the "insolvency court." Competition pushed to such extremes is permanently beneficial to none, and ultimately injurious to all.

The good natured and mild tempered controversy on the Electric light question will probably result in obtaining the desired object. The advocacy of the DAILY BULLETIN is virtually endorsed by the Advertiser, though we differ on minor points. The last paragraph of our contemporary's editorial has our sincere approbation, and it is hoped that beneficial results will arise therefrom.

W. C. T. U.
WORK AMONG HAWAIIANS—ANNUAL REPORT OF MISS MARY E. GREEN.
The pioneer work of one year ago, which was then but an experiment, has resulted favorably to the progress of temperance among Hawaiians, throughout the entire group of islands. We feel no regret but rather deep pleasure, as the experience of the year past in review before us. We thank God, and take courage in spite of the dark clouds that hang low and heavy over the national horizon. Let us ask great favors of the God whom we serve, nothing doubting. He bestows liberally, we must work in earnest, pray in faith, and look ever for the silver rift in the dark cloud. From six and seven troubles has the nation been delivered, when men's hearts were high and faint, and the hearts of women bowed down. Lifted their eyes to heaven for deliverance. It came. These islands have been baptized by the spirit of true religion, and many immortal souls have entered upon the joys and employments of the heavenly world, saved by the grace of God. The temperance societies organized on Oahu, at Honolulu, Kamaoili, Manoa, and Waikiki, have proved helpful to the cause, as the members themselves assert. Few from these societies have fallen, and names have been added to the lists. Honolulu society numbers one hundred and forty. We have held temperance meetings weekly, at first, on each Thursday afternoon; but the male members of the society not being able to attend during the day, on account of work, we changed the time to Saturday evening.

I have talked temperance to the children of the Government schools, at Kawaiahae and Kaunakapili. One center of interest in the cause is Kawaiahae Female Seminary. Hunt's "Child's Health Primer" is taught there, and temperance principles are faithfully inculcated. Ninety-seven of the young ladies have signed the pledge. At the last election there were Hawaiians in Honolulu, true to principle, who would not be bought for money, men who feared God rather than man. An old Hawaiian and his wife, who live in high places maintain their Christian character in spite of all that would lure them from the "pono"—the right. At Kamaoili the good work continues. The secretary of the society was asked if he did not fear that the approaching festivities attending the King's birthday, might lead the members of the society into intemperance. "No, no," he coolly replied, "the President and I can look out for the youngsters." This society enrolls sixty-four names.

Manoa Society numbers forty. On several public occasions the children have sung in Hawaiian, "Turn your glasses down, boys," with fine effect.

Waikiki society numbers twenty members. The monthly meetings are always interesting, and attendance fair. The pupils of the public schools are present on such occasions, and we anticipate the healthy influence exerted will widen and deepen as years roll on.

I went to Kamaoili in April last, where I spent a month at Lihue, and adjacent places. Also at Koloa and Waimea, preaching gospel temperance at the churches, the school houses, and the dwelling places of the people. I should have completed a tour of the island had not unavoidable circumstances prevented, also a tour of Hawaii and Oahu.

The temperance societies at Waiohinu, Kau, and Hookeana, Kona, Hawaii, are large and prosperous. Their officers are men and women of more than ordinary ability. By this week's mail I received a letter from Judge Martin, a Hawaiian, dated Waiohinu, Hawaii, in which he says: "I am very happy to inform you that the Temperance Societies at Waiohinu, Naelehu, and Hookeana are in an advance step. The total number of members to date is 117. Since I came back from Honolulu we held a general meeting in Waiohinu which was a success. Seven new members were added to the list. To-day (Nov. 16) we held another meeting in the Waiohinu church on the occasion of His Majesty's birthday. We were very glad to see no less than 200 people in the church. A nice present was made to His Majesty by adding four new members; the four were known by every one to be old kulu merchants. This is one of the finest and quietest days in Waiohinu. There has not been a sign of drunkenness around. I am also able to say that since the society was formed, the number of cases in court under the influence of liquor has been reduced to six in twelve months."

On the 13th of July last, I left Honolulu for Maui. I visited Hana, and found after convening the people at the church, that the anti-rum portion of the community had held their own with the exception of two or three individuals. Four of the members have died, others taking their places, so the number sixty yet remains. The boys and girls who, the year previous, took the white ribbon badge, are growing stronger to resist evil, and have no desire to take "the first glass."

At Paia, I found the society had grown in numbers; at present eighty. One man who had been a hard drinker, came forward and signed the pledge, an answer to the earnest pleadings of the good old father for his erring son.

At Wailuku, Maui, the liquor licensed saloon still thrives on the hard earned wages of natives and foreigners; still scatters fire brands, arrows and death; still engenders poverty and crime. I held a meeting at the church where members of the union gave favorable reports. They number thirty-three. They greatly need efficient officers. One man gave testimony to the fact that he had kept the pledge, taken when I met him at the Wailuku prison the previous year, and that he felt himself to be a better and a happier man. So he indeed seemed, the contrast was marked.

At Wailuku I met the society, after having spent three days in laboring from house to house, endeavoring to awaken fresh hope and enthusiasm in the hearts of the people. The number of signers has risen from eight to thirty-seven, since my former visit.

At Waiehi, I was cheered by a full house and an appreciative audience; faithfully had the meetings been continued. Thirty-seven are on the Secretary's list. The good word is: "We are keeping the evil away. We are hopeful for our homes and our children." The Government day school is admirably conducted; a portion of the pupils became members of the society. I visited many homes in Waiehi (lying between Waiehi and Wailuku), talked temperance to a school of boys and girls where fourteen signed the pledge.

From the "Four Waters" I came on to the quiet sea port of Lahaina. Historic Lahaina. Once a home for Hawaiian chiefs, royal in descent, and royal in allegiance to the King of kings. Here, too, has Satan had a strong hold, inciting the people to indulge in ardent spirits to their ruin. I was met on the wharf by the pastor, Rev. A. Pali, and conducted to his home, where I remained a week in his well regulated family. Here I formed a union, laboring at the church most of the day. Many rose and told the sad effects of intemperance in their own lives. A student from the North Pacific Missionary Institute made a noble speech in favor of total abstinence. The pastor was chosen President, the Judge, Secretary. There are four district Judges who hold offices in our societies. Here twenty persons signed the pledge. The following Friday I held a prayer meeting with the women at the church. Petitions sincere and earnest were offered, and a sense of God's presence was felt. Such prayers "move the hand that moves the world."

At Lahainaluna Seminary for Hawaiian youths, I was kindly offered the use of the main hall, where I met the students. Here, as well as elsewhere, I exhibited Dr. Kellogg's temperance charts. Deep interest was manifested, and thirty-four intelligent lads placed their names to the pledge. Officers were chosen from among their own number. As I listened to their full rich voices in song, and looked into their pleasant faces, I felt that there is still much to hope for in the future of the Hawaiian race.

The following Sunday, the pastor's wife accompanied me to Kamaoili, five miles from Lahaina. A company of adults and children with their pastor were at the "halehalewai," or meeting house, awaiting my arrival. Here I organized a union of sixteen members.

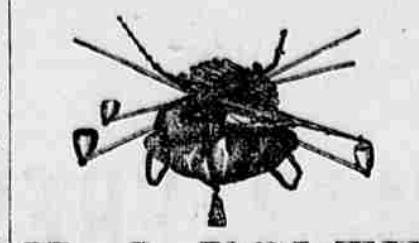

September 30th, I crossed the Pailolo channel, and landed on the rocky coast of Molokai, recognizing none of the few who came to the beach. To my disappointment the pastor had moved, and was living several miles away. A policeman kindly offered me the use of his horse and saddle, and directed me to Honoumuli the home of Judge Kupihea, where I was cordially received. Mrs. Kupihea gave me the use of her best horse for all my after travels on Molokai. The people considered it a special providence that directed me to the Judge's, as he had at times yielded to temptation to drink. But the pleasant stay with himself and family, led to his signing the pledge, and becoming president of the society that I formed at Kamaoili, the former headquarters of the missionaries. Here I spent the day till 3 o'clock, p. m., holding religious services, and organizing a society of thirty-one members. Here I met a goodly number of old men and women in whose hearts the seeds of truth had been sown by the missionaries. They greeted me most cordially, and rejoiced for my arrival, but were puzzled why they should be called upon to sign the pledge, when they had never tasted liquor. The Judge rose, and said, "It is the force of your example that is sought." Later in the day I was asked to visit another church where the Young People's Christian Association hold their meetings. It was a profitable season. The leader was an honest, faithful worker for the Master. The long row of neatly attired children recited each a Scripture text, when the whole would rise and sing a Gospel hymn. Old and young alike participated in the pleasure, and were manifestly in sober earnest to keep their Association alive. They wished no margin left for intemperance. Hoped no licensed liquor saloon would ever enter their borders. A crowd gathered around us as we mounted our horses, and, amid the loud words of "aloha nui" and hearty hand shakes, it was hard to leave. But an eighteen miles ride lay before us on the morrow. At dawn of day we set forth for Hala, the eastern point of the island; my companions were the wife of the pastor, and her son, nine years of age, who, on his tiny pony carried the roll of charts. We met an educated Hawaiian, who told me of his life of intemperance, and how, through the entreaties of his little granddaughter, he had reformed. Said he, "I will never again taste a drop of liquor, God helping me." As we passed along the eastern portion of Molokai, the path led up the mountain's side; the country became richer in vegetation, till we reached the culminating point—Hala. Before making the last descent into the valley, I devoted a season to the view below; the ocean dashing upon the curved sand beach; cliffs to right and left two miles up; and at the head of the valley, are the waterfalls, Moaula and Hupapua. A stream flows thence to the sea. Cottage homes (wooden houses) on either side, some nestled up steep ascents among rose bushes and convolvulus vines, the church with its spire—an accompaniment to every Hawaiian settlement—and the tastefully furnished residence of Representative Paehoa, were the principal features. There lay far below, the beautiful picture, no liquor saloon and but a small apology for a store. Soon the news spread of my arrival. The ensuing day a trustee of the church called at each house in the valley, to give due notice of the temperance meeting. The inhabitants of this valley are an industrious people. Here I organized a society of thirty-six members. Here is a day school of ninety-three bright, wide awake boys and girls. I gave, at the teacher's request, a talk to the girls on the use of tobacco, told them the story of the three years old Miss whom I once met, who offered me her cigarette, saying, "E puhī kama," "Let us two smoke." Whereupon the whole ninety-three laughed heartily.
